1. Indication of allowable subject matter in claims 2 and 3 is withdrawn in view of the following grounds of rejection.

2. The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

3. Claims 1-5 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Japanese Patent No. 57-000784. The reference discloses an information recording card having a support that may be polyvinyl chloride (see example 2). The card has an ink absorbing layer that may contain inorganic pigment such as silica or alumina, and resin binder (see page 6). While the reference does not specifically disclose the use of alumina hydrate, this pigment is a well known alternative to silica or alumina in ink absorbing layers. The reference also discloses a lubricious layer over the ink absorbing layer that is composed of lubricant particles which may be of a thermoplastic resin such as polyethylene (see page 8 of the reference). On page 10, the reference describes how ink applied to the surface passes through the lubricious layer and is retained in the ink absorbing layer below. Therefore, both of these layers are porous.

It is noted that this reference document is described on pages 3 and 4 of applicants' specification as having the following drawbacks : 1) it is formed using organic solvent which is potentially unsafe and hazardous to the environment and 2) use of organic solvent with some polyvinyl chloride (PVC) supports may result in curvature of the card or cracking of the coating. These arguments concerning the reference are unpersuasive since the claims are directed to a final product rather than the method of making. There is nothing in the applied prior art indicating that organic solvent is present in the final product. Nor does the art indicate problems with cracking of the coating or curving of the card when solvent is used in coating a PVC card. Finally, there is nothing in the instant articles claims that precludes the use of solvent in the formation process.

4. Applicant's arguments with respect to claims 1, 4 and 5 have been considered but are moot in view of the new ground(s) of rejection.

5. Any inquiry concerning this communication or earlier communications from the examiner should be directed to Pamela R. Schwartz whose telephone number is 703-308-2424.
